Counselling and support for psychosocial problems related to cancer

Director
Dr. Elisabeth Jentschke

Patients diagnosed with cancer frequently experience emotional distress, such as fears and worries. At the beginning of treatment, all bodily, social and psychological sequelae are sometimes hard to foresee. Thus, psycho-oncological care may be important across the illness trajectory, that is, during both inpatient and outpatient treatment.

We would like to offer you help with coping with the diagnosis of cancer, getting through treatment and adapting to a changing life.

Scheduling appointments

Counselling and psychotherapy are provided by psychologists and psycho-oncologically trained physicians in either individual sessions or groups. Partners and relatives are also welcome. Physicians and nursing staff on the ward may help you scheduling an appointment. We offer psycho-oncological care also after the end of your inpatient stay.

Talking to other patients with cancer may also be helpful. We very much appreciate a good cooperation with the self-help groups in our region. We offer you support with finding a contact person and establishing contact.
